

name was brought to me more and more. I found his name, and even his sermons in lectureship books and old meeting advertisements. I wish I could tell you how many times I have heard, "If you can preach anything like your father ..." I don't mean to imply that he was famous. It was just in the small world of the church, he had done a lot of good work that evaded my realization until I too was a grown man. For, as I already stated, he was just my father to me. And he was good at it.

Jesus was not recognized for what He really was, in His home town; thus disdained. The people only saw him as the local boy. He was the carpenter's son. They knew His bothers and sisters. Some of them had known Him since He was a child. While they had heard of some of His great works, and they did not really doubt them. He was still just Jesus. To see Him as a fulfillment of prophecy, or simply as someone exceptional, was difficult for these people. Understand, they are still without justifiable excuse. Shouldn't it be that the people who know someone so well, should be the very ones to endorse Him. As John would later write, "He came to His own, and His own did not receive Him" (John 1:11). Whether it is born of jealousy or some other emotion, it is still unnecessarily wrong. Jesus, the Savior and Son of God, was among them, and they missed it. Don't be blinded by familiarity. — Russ
